THE 99TH CONGRESS: DEMOCRATIC ACCOMPLISHMENTS

A Report From Senator Robert C. Byrd
Senate Democratic Leader

As the 99th Congress draws to a close and we look forward to the centennial Congress, I wish to review the contributions that Senate Democrats have made to the national debate on the great issues facing the United States and the world.

It has been a privilege to have served as the leader of a group of Senators, who, although in the minority, have accomplished so much for the American people. The record of the 99th Congress shows that Senate Democrats have pulled together on many critical occasions to seek to strengthen our nation and its democratic processes.

THE BUDGET

The record-breaking Federal deficits of the past five years are one of the most critical issues facing this country. When this Administration took office in January, 1981, the Federal debt was less than $1 trillion. Time and again, President Reagan declared that the Federal debt was too high, and that his Administration's economic policies would produce a balanced budget by 1983, if not by 1982 and then by 1984, then by 1985.

Six years later, we know that the Reagan-Republican economic program has, among other things, doubled the Federal debt. What was a $1 trillion debt five years ago is now more than $2.1 trillion, and growing. The Reagan Administration has done in five short years what it took the previous 39 Administrations 191 years—the entire history of the republic—to do: to increase the Federal debt by a trillion dollars. And the cost of financing that debt next year will be $139 billion—more than $380 million per day! That amounts to 36 cents of every dollar paid in individual income taxes.

During the first session of the 99th Congress, Senate Democrats sought to reverse this trend of fiscal irresponsibility and to put this Nation back onto the track of budgetary sanity. We offered two major budget alternatives, both of which reduced the deficit more than the budget proposed by the Republican leadership.

Furthermore, both Democratic proposals sought to reorder the Reagan-Republican spending priorities. By requiring corporations and high income individuals to pay their fair share of taxes, our budgets promoted economic growth, provided for increased funding for national defense, and added funds to programs that insure continuing investment in America's future—such as education, scientific research, and infrastructure programs. The Republican majority could not accept this balanced approach to deficit reduction; it defeated both Democratic alternatives.

In the second session of the 99th Congress, Senate Democrats continued the effort to reorder the misguided fiscal priorities that have marked this Administration's budgets. Building on a statement of budget principles compiled in January by a Democratic working group on the budget, the Senate Democratic Conference endorsed an amendment to the budget resolution to put a higher priority on promoting economic growth and competitiveness. This amendment included additional funds for education, job training, scientific research and development, and natural resource management, while providing the resources to pay for these enhancements. Democrats also offered amendments to restore funds for such important programs as revenue sharing, child immunization, and Superfund toxic waste cleanup.

During the last months of the first session, a crisis of confidence in the Administration's fiscal policy, and the failure of presidential leadership in reducing budget deficits prompted Congress to pass the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Amendment. This measure was a frank admission that the Reagan-Republican economic and fiscal policies were neither producing economic growth, nor reducing—or likely to reduce—the disastrous Federal deficits.

Senate Democrats proposed amendments that would have begun the deficit reduction process immediately, rather than allowing it to be put off for a few more years as permitted under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings proposal. The Republican majority failed to live up to its rhetorical concerns about the deficit and rejected the Democratic measures.

TRADE

This Administration's unsound and unhealthy economic policies are producing other disastrous consequences. American farmers and industrial workers are struggling to regain lost ground and improve their standard of living. By some accounts, the economies of more than half of our states have fallen to recessionary levels.

The economic disasters that many states and many sectors of our economy are encountering can be considerably attributed to America's intolerable trade deficits. Each of the past four years has produced a record-breaking, job-destroying trade deficit. This year, the trade deficit could exceed $180 billion. This is a national catastrophe, as well as a national embarrassment.

Largely as a result of the trade imbalance, the United States, for the first time since 1914, became a debtor nation last year. In six years, the Administration has accomplished what two world wars, a global depression, and an oil crisis could not—it has reduced the United States from the position of the world's largest creditor to the status of the world's largest debtor nation.

At the current rate, the net U.S. debt to foreigners will have risen to $250 billion by the end of this year. That exceeds the foreign debt of all of Latin America combined, measured on a comparable basis.

The Administration's grim trade record is evidence of its failure to maintain America's global economic leadership. This failure is destroying America's industrial base. Since 1981, the U.S. has experienced a decline of 1.7 million manufacturing jobs. Meanwhile, the Administration has been unable or unwilling to meet the challenge of international competition.

On the other hand, Senate Democrats have responded to this challenge. We have proposed numerous initiatives to deal with this economic catastrophe.

One Democratic working group examined current trade policy alternatives and recommended actions. In its report, "The New Global Economy: First Steps in a United States Trade Strategy," the working group called for a strategic approach to trade and presented the case for an aggressive, realistic response to the trade crisis. Senate Democrats followed up the report by introducing the "Trade Policy Act of 1985." This legislation offered a framework for a tough, comprehensive approach to the challenge of global competition.

The Working Group also proposed the "Unfair Trade Concessions Requirements Act" which would force foreign governments to end practices which require American companies to invest abroad as a condition of trade—a practice which costs American jobs.

Senate Democrats have also led the drive to restore America's competitive edge in the world. The Competitiveness Working Group prepared a landmark report that offers a blueprint for action to assure a world-class American economy in the decades to come.

In the first session, through the persistent efforts of many, Congress approved remedial legislation for the domestic textile and shoe industries. Without offering anything but more promises to these industries that are being wiped out by foreign competition, President Reagan vetoed the measure.

Senate Democrats have pressed the Administration for coordinated action to assure that world currency values are realigned in order to reduce the staggering trade imbalances. Democratic initiatives forced the Administration to take some action on this front. But the currencies of some of our major partners, including Canada and Mexico, have continued to decline because the Administration has failed to achieve coordination on this important issue.

In the second session, Democrats supported legislation that provided adjustment assistance to help retrain American petroleum industry workers who have lost their jobs to imports.

On August 9, 1986, Democrats endorsed an amendment to the Department of Defense authorization that required the President to act within a specified time to let defense-essential industries and workers know whether or not imports threaten the national security. Despite the fact that this amendment merely required the President to make timely decisions in cases where the national security could be undermined by imports, every voting Republican Senator opposed it. Even when national security could be undermined by imports, Senate Republicans refused to support or strengthen our trade laws.

AGRICULTURE

American farmers are suffering the worst economic distress they have encountered since the 1930's. But they have constantly found support from Senate Democrats. During the first session of the 99th Congress, Senate Democrats rushed to the aid of American farmers with a proposal for emergency credit assistance. Only by threatening to hold up the nomination of Ed Meese for Attorney General could the Democratic leadership even secure an agreement from the Republican leadership to consider this needed measure. Congress eventually approved the legislation, but President Reagan vetoed it. Democratic pressure on this issue, however, did force the Administration to expand credit assistance to farmers.

During the consideration of the 1985 farm bill, in the Agriculture Committee and on the Senate floor, Democrats fought against any retreat from the four-year price freeze contained in the committee-reported bill. While Senate Republicans pushed for a one-year freeze, Democrats maintained that farmers needed the stability of multiyear target prices to overcome their financial burdens.

In the 99th Congress, Senate Democrats fought for the survival of family farms—a way of life now on the verge of extinction. Senate Democrats proposed a number of amendments, including one to give more control over local farm credit banks to local shareholders, and to require the labeling of all foreign meat products. This latter amendment would have enabled consumers to avoid purchasing meat from countries that still use dangerous pesticides or chemicals and helped them to buy more American meat. We also successfully proposed an amendment that provided assistance to farmers having difficulty obtaining credit elsewhere so they could begin spring planting.

This year, as the agricultural recession worsened, Senate Democrats led a successful move to pass legislation requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to make advance deficiency payments for the 1987 crops of wheat, cotton, rice, and feed grains. The amendment passed the Senate overwhelmingly and was incorporated into the budget reconciliation bill.

Senate Democrats also successfully offered an amendment expressing the sense of the Senate that the Secretary of Agriculture should institute an advance recourse loan program for 1986 crops.

And as the severity of damage from this summer's drought, especially in the southeast, became known, Democrats added a provision to the debt limit bill to provide emergency assistance to farmers and ranchers hard hit by this natural disaster.

EDUCATION

Senate Democrats have acted with vision, not only in attempting to resolve current economic difficulties, but also in promoting economic policies that invest in America's future. Part of that future is our children, and a better future for our children depends upon a good education.

In the 99th Congress, Democrats helped block the Reagan Administration's push for a 26 percent cut in Federal assistance to higher education, and for changes in the Guaranteed Student Loan Program that would have eliminated over one million students from eligibility.

Democrats also took steps to improve the quality of American education, for example, by proposing legislation to strengthen the Federal commitment to training teachers.

TAX REFORM

The fight for tax relief for the middle class—and for assuring that all Americans and American firms pay their fair share of taxes—originated as a Democratic initiative, and we were, in many ways, successful. The Finance Committee's tax bill contained major reforms long championed by Senate Democrats. This tax bill gave better breaks to middle income taxpayers than to high income people. It closed the most abusive tax shelters and imposed tough minimum taxes on wealthy individuals and highly profitable corporations. It raised both the standard deduction and personal exemption, thus providing tax relief to middle income people, and it removed 6 million of the Nation's poor from the tax rolls.

On the Senate floor, Democrats fought to maintain the Individual Retirement Account program for the middle class. Although we narrowly lost that fight, our efforts were not in vain. The Senate-House conference fashioned an IRA program to preserve full deductibility for virtually the entire middle class.

A number of Senate Democrats, especially those on the Finance Committee, played key roles in developing the legislation adopted by the Finance Committee and helped steer that bill through the Senate and ultimately to enactment.

VETERANS BENEFITS

While the Reagan Administration has attempted to cut veterans programs, Senate Democrats have continued our commitment to keep America's promise to those who have fought for our country. Democrats opposed budget cuts that would have reduced health care programs by more than $2 billion over three years (1986-88), thus eliminating in-patient care for more than a quarter-million veterans and closing many existing VA facilities. Senate Democrats also opposed Administration cuts in cost-of-living adjustments for veterans compensation and pension benefits, and Administration efforts to double the fee charged veterans using a VA home loan guarantee. Furthermore, 87 percent of Senate Democrats voted to exempt VA service-connected compensation from Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cuts.

TRANSPORTATION AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

In the 99th Congress, Senate Democrats promoted community development programs that are essential for the economic survival of many areas and represent the government/private sector cooperation that this Administration professes to support. With the support of some Republicans, Senate Democrats blocked the Administration's efforts to eliminate Federal funding for Amtrak—the rail transportation system that provides service to 20 million passengers each year.

In 1985, again with some Republican support, Senate Democrats blocked Administration efforts to wipe out several successful, job-creating programs that are also vital to the economic security of so much of America, including the Appalachian Regional Commission (ARC), the Urban Development Action Grant Program (UDAG), the Economic Development Administration (EDA), and the Community Development Block Grant program.

ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT

Senate Democrats have continued our fight for an energy-secure America. During the 99th Congress, we proposed taking advantage of low oil prices and urged accelerating the filling of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. Congress appropriated $400 million for the Clean Coal Technology program, a major initiative to facilitate the commercial use of our most abundant fossil energy resource—coal—in an environmentally acceptable manner.

Senate Democrats have struggled to protect the health and safety of the American people as we have struggled to protect the Nation's environment. In the first session, several Democratic Senators played leadership roles in committee and on the Senate floor in reauthorizing the Superfund law. The expansion of this program recognizes the dangers of toxic waste and the threat it poses to public health and welfare. In addition, Democrats strongly supported legislation improving the Clean Water Act and the Safe Drinking Water Act—both of which passed the Senate in 1985.

HUMAN SERVICES

During the second session of the 99th Congress, Senate Democrats sought to improve several child health programs, such as those providing supplemental food for women, infants, and children, health block grants to States; childhood immunizations; and community health centers.

SOCIAL SECURITY

In the 99th Congress, yet again, Senate Democrats were forced to fight for the preservation of Social Security benefits as the Administration tried once more to reduce Federal deficits on the backs of the elderly.

In the FY 1986 budget resolution, Senate Democrats fought the Senate Republican effort to cut Social Security COLA's. Democrats also supported instructing the Treasury to restore to the Social Security trust funds the funds lost during the time these funds were disinvested to provide operating cash for the government. In addition, Democratic support for protecting Social Security resulted in the exclusion of Social Security from automatic budget cuts under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings process.

Democrats also successfully deleted from the Republican leadership budget many of the most onerous proposals that would have devastated the Medicare program and would have increased out-of-pocket health care costs for the elderly and disabled.

LABOR

During the 99th Congress, Senate Democrats waged vigorous efforts to protect Federal laws ensuring the health, safety, and living standards of American workers. And, in a bipartisan effort, the Senate approved the most important and comprehensive restructuring of Civil Service Retirement in recent decades.

DRUGS AND LAW ENFORCEMENT

In the second session of the 99th Congress, Senate Democrats successfully worked with the Republican majority to secure the passage of a bipartisan drug control package. The Democratic Working Group on Drug Abuse played a major and fundamental role in putting together this urgently needed measure that provides concrete, comprehensive, and effective actions against drug abuse and the illegal drug industry.

Democrats are also proud of the Senate's passage of the bill to ban cop-killer bullets. The bill makes it illegal to willfully sell, manufacture, or import this ammunition, which is designed solely to pierce the body vests or armor used by law enforcement officers.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

During the 99th Congress, Senate Democrats promoted a strong national defense based on the best possible American technology, not the greatest possible amounts of American money. We established that our priorities in national security are reforming the Pentagon's wasteful procurement process, strengthening our conventional forces, and maintaining our nuclear deterrent in a manner contributing to nuclear stability and arms control.

On the first day of the 99th Congress, the Majority Leader and I joined in a common effort to create a bipartisan Senate Arms Control Observer Group to monitor the Geneva arms control negotiations. As a result of the group's contacts with both American and Soviet arms control officials, the full Senate will be better able to fulfill its responsibilities should a treaty be presented to the Senate for ratification.

Arms control remained a Democratic priority in the 99th Congress. Under the leadership of Senate Democrats, the Senate emphatically urged the President to continue in 1986 to refrain from policies that would undercut the SALT II accords as long as the Soviets show similar restraint in adhering to central numerical sublimits.

Senate Democrats recognized that restructuring military spending would help force the Pentagon to improve management and eliminate waste. We proposed a fiscally-responsible defense spending program that would improve combat readiness and sustain progress in research, that would provide an adequate pay raise for military personnel, but that would force the Pentagon to "clean up its management act."

We proposed major improvements to the currently wasteful defense procurement process, such as urging the creation of the new position of Undersecretary of Defense for Acquisition to streamline defense procurement policy-making.

During the 99th Congress, Senate Democrats led the way in strengthening our nuclear deterrent by ensuring that high priority programs receive full funding. The Senate endorsed Democratic proposals to secure full funding for the Stealth bomber and advanced cruise missile, to cap the B-1B bomber, and to promote the fastest possible development of the survivable Midgetman, the small mobile intercontinental ballistic missile.

Senate Democrats also won Senate approval to deploy no more than 50 MX missiles in vulnerable basing modes and to shift the Administration's land-based missile priorities toward more survivable and effective deterrent forces, such as the Midgetman.

We supported a continued, vigorous funding of the Strategic Defense Initiative to investigate the feasibility and potential of such technologies. But we opposed the Reagan-Republican "blank check" for SDI funding.

Senate Democrats supported strengthening our conventional forces, including increases in our combat readiness accounts for aircraft flying hours, ship steaming days, unit field experience, depot maintenance, and real property maintenance. We led the Senate effort to pressure our NATO allies and Japan to pay a larger and fairer share of our mutual defense burden.

In 1985, Democrats sought to increase the survivability of our military satellites by supporting negotiations for mutual, verifiable arms control limits on anti-satellite (ASAT) threats and a carefully-paced ASAT weapons research program.

Several Senate Democrats took the lead in proposing legislation to reorganize the basic Pentagon management structure to improve the quality of military advice given to the President by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, strengthen the role of senior field commanders in the budget process, and eliminate congressional micromanagement and duplicative Pentagon senior management levels. The overall bill was a tremendous bipartisan effort which provided the most comprehensive Pentagon management reform in 25 years, and I am proud to say that Senate Democrats had a major role in its development and passage.

The Pentagon independent Inspector General's office, drafted by Senate Democrats in the 98th Congress and enacted over the opposition of the Administration, undoubtedly helped inspire many of these reforms. It was during the 99th Congress that this office uncovered contracting fraud, and abuse in the Defense Department's procurement system, and the payment of outrageous prices for common household items, including $44 for a light bulb and $436 for a hammer. The revelations by the office led to the enactment of legislation to improve weapons procurement systems, restrict the "revolving door" opportunities for military and civilian procurement officials, increase penalties for intentional false contract claims, and increase competition in defense procurement.

FOREIGN POLICY

Senate Democrats led the drive for a coherent and consistent foreign policy worthy of the Nation that leads the free world. We proposed alternative policies in an effort to develop a foreign policy behind which the American people can unite, and which will inspire our allies to join us in common endeavors.

During 1985, Senate Democrats were in the forefront of initiatives to address the security and foreign policy challenges America faces in all parts of the world.

Our efforts in the 99th Congress built upon our actions in the closing days of the 98th Congress when the lack of a coherent Administration policy in the Middle East collapsed completely in the rubble of the Marine barracks in Beirut. From the Middle East to South Africa, Central America, and East Asia, Democrats attempted to fashion programs and policies based on the effective use of the full range of America's economic, political, military, and diplomatic tools and resources. The emphasis in all cases was on diplomacy, and only in the most extreme circumstances, when diplomacy had clearly failed, such as in the case of Libya, was the use of force endorsed as a needed last resort.

Several months before the election in the Philippines last year, the Senate adopted a resolution calling for political reforms in that nation and urging that any election there be free and fair. While the Executive Branch was sending muddled signals to the Filipino people to the effect that there had been election fraud on both sides, Senate Democrats took the lead in passing a resolution declaring that widespread election fraud had denied the Marcos government a popular mandate. The resolution's strong language helped galvanize the democratic forces to take a stand against the country's dictatorship and helped President Aquino peacefully assume power.

Senate Democrats also were in the forefront of promoting the search for peace in the troubled Middle East, and for a fair resolution to the region's complex problems. We did so by encouraging negotiations between the Arab states and Israel, urging increased American involvement in the peace process, and successfully opposing the Administration's excessive reliance on arms sales to Arab nations.

As the situation in Central America grows more dangerous, Senate Democrats have consistently tried to prevent the Administration's policies from entangling U.S. military forces in an armed conflict in that troubled region. During the second session, the Republican majority approved $100 million in funding for the war in Nicaragua. These votes endorsed the Reagan Administration's policy that is undermining the democratic governments of countries surrounding Nicaragua and is putting the U.S. on a one-way road to war. Through a series of amendments, Senate Democrats showed that another road exists, a road more worthy of the American tradition—a road where diplomatic measures are attempted first—where the efforts of other nations in the region are utilized to gain a suitable resolution—before the United States turns to violent intervention. The Democratic proposals stressed diplomatic solutions to the region's complex problems, increased accountability of the funds being sent to the Contras, protection of civilians from the military conflict, promotion of a free press, and opposition to a secret escalation of the Administration's commitment to combat in Central America.

To further the effort to build a more constructive relationship with the Soviet Union, in September, 1985, I led a bipartisan group of Senators to meet with the new Soviet leader General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev. It was our goal to help lay the groundwork for President Reagan's first summit meeting with Secretary Gorbachev, to assess the viewpoints of the new Soviet leader, and to bring to his attention viewpoints strongly held in the Senate. The trip was a success on all accounts.

This past February, under heavy pressure from the U.S. Congress, the Soviet government released human rights activist Anatoly Scharansky from incarceration and permitted him to leave the USSR. Through the efforts of Senate Democrats, Scharansky and his wife, Avital, were awarded Congressional Gold Medals in recognition of their human rights campaign and as a tribute to their courage in the face of Soviet repression.

In that same month, the Senate ratified the Genocide Treaty, an achievement supported overwhelmingly by Senate Democrats.

During the 99th Congress, the eyes of the world were focused on the abuse of basic human rights in South Africa. Democrats have led the way in determining the direction and strength of the message that our government is sending to that nation's oppressive government. Last year, congressional pressure forced the Administration to take its first tentative steps in the direction of sanctions as the President signed an Executive Order which included elements of legislation before Congress at the time.

During the second session, conditions in that country deteriorated drastically. Under pressure by Senate Democrats, the Republican leadership finally agreed to take up the issue. Despite efforts to weaken or kill the measure, we prevailed in putting the United States in line with the international community on this human rights issue—a point dramatically made only days ago when the Senate, joining the House, overrode the President's veto of South African sanctions by a vote of 78-21.

CONCLUSION

In the past two years, Senate Democrats have performed courageously and responsibly as the loyal opposition to serve our great Nation.

We supported the President when we could and opposed him when we felt the country's best interests necessitated a different path. And when we took the latter path, we did so in meaningful, constructive ways.

Likewise, we have worked in cooperation with our colleagues on the other side of the aisle in a common effort for the common good when that was possible. When principle dictated otherwise, and when we felt the national interest demanded, we opposed them. Throughout the two years of the 99th Congress, Senate Democrats left a strong and important mark on public policy.

In the 100th Congress, to which we expect to return to as the majority, we anticipate building on the work and the record of the two years just completed—to help fashion policies and programs that address the needs and responsibilities of this Nation effectively, on a timely basis, in a responsible manner.

Senate Democrats will be ready—as we have been ready during the 99th Congress.

Included in this document are several series of statistical data assessing the work of the Senate during the 99th Congress. Included is a comparison of this session with the nine previous years with regard to days and hours in session, total measures passed, Public Laws enacted, and rollcall votes cast.

An analysis of the major legislation passed by the Senate over the last decade arrives convincingly at the conclusion that this body functioned more productively under Democratic leadership, and would benefit from the return of Democratic control next year.

In fact, under Republican control of the Senate and the White House, the number of bills passed by the Senate which could be termed "major" has dropped by 45 percent since 1977.

With regard to public laws enacted, contrary to the conclusions one might draw from a cursory comparison of each year's total over ten years, it is apparent from a closer analysis that an increasingly high percentage of public laws during recent years is of minor or limited substantive consequence or is administrative in nature. In 1986, over 70 percent could be categorized as of minor or limited substantive consequence or administrative in nature—which is a sizeable increase from 17 percent in 1977.

PUBLIC LAWS

97th, 98th, and 99th Congresses Compared with 95th and 96th Congresses

A listing of public laws enacted during the 97th, 98th, and 99th Congresses shows that more than half were of a nonsubstantive or administrative nature. Of the 424 laws enacted this session, 74 percent fit into this category. Most of these laws commemorate an event or person or dedicate a day, week, or month for some worthwhile cause. The 97th, 98th, and 99th Congresses under Senate Republican Leadership compare very unfavorably with the two previous Congresses which were under Democratic leadership:

99th Congress (1985-86)—Out of 664 public laws, 481 or 72 percent were nonsubstantive.

98th Congress (1983-84)—Out of 461 public laws, 272 or 59 percent were nonsubstantive.

97th Congress (1981-82)—Out of 473 public laws, 227 or 48 percent were nonsubstantive.

96th Congress (1979-80)—Out of 613 public laws, 219, or 36 percent were nonsubstantive.

95th Congress (1977-78)—Out of 633 public laws, 164 or 26 percent were nonsubstantive.

A look at the bills enacted this year raises the serious question of whether Congress is carrying out its legislative responsibilities. Many of the bills enacted were of a cosmetic nature. Debate and passage of separate authorizations for many important programs languished on the Senate Calendar or in committee while some high-sounding proclamation was signed into law.

The following lists all measures signed into law by Congress and session from 1977 through 1984. It also identifies and totals all those categorized as routine, administrative, and/or nonsubstantive.

PUBLIC LAWS, 96th CONGRESS
219 out of 613 public laws, or 36 percent, were nonsubstantive or administrative

1ST SESSION (January 15, 1979–December 20, 1979)
